International Graduate (MA) Program in Contemporary China Studies

School of Advanced International and Area Studies
East China Normal University

Emphasizing cutting-edge research on international relations and regional issues, ECNU’s School of Advanced International and Area Studies (SAIAS) is dedicated to training and educating MA and Ph.D. students in the field of international studies for careers in think tanks, government, and multinational corporations.

SAIAS specializes in studies of Russia and Eurasia, co-development with neighboring countries, American studies, European studies, among other themes. In addition to area studies, SAIAS also promotes teaching and research about topics in international relations, such as great power relations, social transition, international strategy, international relations theory, and international political economy.

Aiming to bring its research and teaching to an even higher level, SAIAS is committed to undertaking research and training projects, offering consultation services, and facilitating international cooperation and exchange.

Contemporary China Studies (CCS) is a two-year international master program specifically designed for overseas students having an interest in deepening their knowledge about China’s politics, economics, and diplomacy. Designed to introduce students to China’s domestic and international politics, the program will provide its graduates with the theoretical toolkit, practical knowledge, and analytical capacity that they need to succeed in a globalized world.

Application Requirements

Program applicants must possess a Bachelor’s degree in International Relations, History, Economic, Politic Science or other related majors. An official copy of TOEFL or IELTS scores is also needed for the application. For more information regarding specific application procedures, please see:
http://lxs.ecnu.edu.cn/EN/msg.php?id=44

Degree Requirements

In order to obtain the MA degree in Contemporary China Studies, each student needs at least 36 credits in total. Among these credits, one needs 19 credits from the list of required courses (5 required regular courses, plus “field trip” and “master thesis”). Each student also needs least 10 credits from the elective courses offered by this program. Students also need 7 credits from language and general courses required for all international students, as stipulated by the Graduate Division of ECNU. On top of these requirements, students can also take additional courses from other departments and schools at ECNU. Master’s thesis is required to be written in English, and adhere to professional academic standards and university guidelines.

Scholarships

CCS students have the opportunity to apply for two kinds of scholarships. One is offered by the Chinese Ministry of Education. The second is offered by the Shanghai Municipal Government. Students can apply for both scholarship programs concurrently. However, each program requires a separate application and supporting materials and only one scholarship can be awarded per student.
